

JDW,

Your 4/5 note accompanying the Pacific Sun's Razzmitazz recommends it as a cure for low blood pressure. Mine has been elevated for a few days but it was just what the doctor ordered for sitting in a stiff breeze with the inside temperature at 40° as it was x for what I suppose might be called a mild and temporary depression.

This morning the new living room floor was sanded then had a filler put on and then a finish coat. For it to dry before Lil gets home it needed air. Well, air in strong motion is not something we've lacked for close to a week. It does cut as it rushes past the one place not completely cluttered by ~~xxx~~ all the furniture and flowers that had to be moved.

(I guess I'd better recognize it. Today is my 62nd birthday, ol' Razz didn't raise the blood pressure a bit, and it must mean that I'm getting old. Or used to the Razzes.)

Hour later. The floor is done except for the trim, I got practically no work done by moving into the kitchen and have much work to get what I moved backed into some kind of order.

So I'll dispense with the Razzing. It is frightful stuff, more so because he and apparently Stanley take it all as real. Korff, it seems, is not really alone. Poor Nixon. Framed into Watergate in which he is not innocent.

You are correct about the use of the orphans, so many of whom died in order to be saved from their own people. But have you stopped to think that as with the POWs it is not original? Wach is an improvisation off something earlier.

I got a pack of Galomses from a British filmmaker, my birthday present. To myself, faced with all this added chaos, my present is bed a little after 10.

Thanks,
